

Ferrari

Ferrari

Founded in 1939 by Enzo Ferrari and headquartered in Maranello, Italy

Went public in 2015, listed on the New York Stock Exchange (NYSE: RACE)

Operates in the luxury sector, not as a mass-market automotive brand

Core business focuses on high-performance luxury sports cars produced in limited quantities

Strong brand exclusivity and pricing power, supported by controlled production volumes

Additional revenues from racing (Formula 1), brand licensing, and luxury merchandising

Conclusion

This financial analysis covers Ferrari's fiscal years 2023 and 2024; 2025 full-year data is not yet available as the annual report will be released at the end of December 2025.

Ferrari delivered strong revenue, profit, and cash flow growth in 2024, with improved liquidity, margins, and operational performance.

The company demonstrates solid financial health, balanced capital structure, and robust free cash generation.

Near-term challenges include slower growth expectations and market concerns around electrification strategy, impacting investor sentiment and share price.

Despite recent stock volatility, Ferrari's brand exclusivity, high profitability, and strategic investments support long-term resilience.

Recommendation: Ferrari remains financially strong with a stable outlook; long-term investors should focus on fundamentals and strategic execution, while short-term market performance may continue to reflect external uncertainties.
